Signal Person Safety Training Course for Cranes

The U.S. Department of Labor's Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) issued a new rule addressing the use of cranes and derricks in construction. The new rule, which replaces a standard that was established in 1971, will go into effect on November 8, 2010. Within the new crane standard OSHA addresses specific qualification requirements for the signal person.

The Signal Person Safety Training Course for Cranes has been developed to provide participants with the essential information to comply with the new OSHA Signal Person Qualification requirements described within 1926.1428. The Signal Person Safety Training Course for Cranes includes a detailed discussion on the four different types of signals used. After completing the Signal Person Safety Training Course participants will be given a written and practical exam. Participants must pass both the written and practical exam with an 80% or better to receive Signal Person ID card and a certification of completion.

Hazards addressed but not limited:

- Basic understanding of:
 - Equipment operation and limitations
 - Crane dynamics
 - Boom deflection
- Definitions applicable to signaling
- Power line safety when signaling
- Problems When Signaling
- When a signal person is required
- Who can give signals
- Types of Signals
- Transmission of Signals
- Signal person Qualifications
- Written test
- Practical test

Who Should Attend:

Construction personnel required, or who could reasonably be expected to signal an operator. Project managers, superintendents, foreman, and safety managers that are responsible for crane activities on construction sites should also attend.

Participants will receive:

- Reference Guide
- Picture I.D. – expires in 4 years
